Reflections of TOWARD 2001

Dear LVC Friends:

What a finale!

Just a few months ago, Lebanon Valley College ended the academic year and the TOWARD 2001 Campaign. Our numbers in both funds received and the campaign total represented new peaks for the college. As of that date, June 30, 1996:

- ❖ The year's gift income of $4,591,548—including campaign pledge fulfillments, annual giving, bequests and public grants—set another annual record for the college. Some 4,784 alumni and other friends made gifts, posting a new participation milestone;

- ❖ The TOWARD 2001 Campaign successfully concluded with 2,890 donors making commitments of a total of $23.945 million, an amount nearly $3 million over the original goal set five years ago;

- ❖ We bid fond farewell to John A. Synodinos, now president emeritus and

- ❖ We joyfully welcomed President G. David Pollick to LVC.

Gratifying as the financial results are, the success of TOWARD 2001 is an even more powerful symbol of the literally thousands of people united in a bold mission for Lebanon Valley College. Indeed, T2001—as we came to call it—was a cascade of confidence, conviction and commitment that has lifted our College to new heights.

Beginning with 100 percent participation by LVC's Board of Trustees and Alumni Council, the TOWARD 2001 Campaign was a story of volunteers and donors. The thoughtful advice and counsel of the Steering Committee (page 18) showed the way to success. Trustees and other alumni and friends carried the T2001 story to people and organizations and secured early gifts. The inspiring support of the College staff and dedicated leadership of our regional campaign co-chairs and committees assured the campaign's final success.

A special word of recognition and thanks is due here to my honorary co-chairs, Clark and Edna Carmean. This outstanding LVC couple—whose service went well beyond their "honorary" title—chaired the campus family campaign, counseled on the Steering Committee, were solicitors in the field and made a personal leadership gift. Their enthusiasm and wisdom energized donors, volunteers and staff alike.

Some major accomplishments during the past eight years would have to include:

- ❖ Introduction of the achievement-based scholarship program
- ❖ Academic partnerships with 23 neighboring school districts in college preparation and science education
- ❖ The Vernon and Doris Bishop Library

- ❖ Establishment of endowed chairs: Dellinger in history and Bishop in chemistry
- ❖ Campus landscaping and the new Benjamin Cantor Entrance
- ❖ The Suzanne H. Arnold Art Gallery and Zimmerman Recital Hall
- ❖ Improvements in student life, including the Mund Center Dining Facility, Leedy Theater and Derickson Hall.

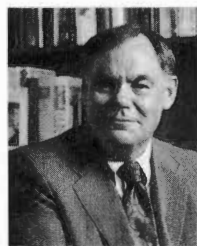

A more complete list appears on pages 10-13.

In this report, President G. David Pollick and President Emeritus John A. Synodinos talk of their perspectives of the campaign, how it met long-standing academic needs and how it positions Lebanon Valley for the future. Their conversation sets the pace for the 21st century.

This publication, as noted on the cover, is also the annual report for the 1995-96 fiscal year. It is a pleasure to report that the college completed the year with a budget of $24 million showing a positive balance of $625,000. These results, within the context of a strong academic program, enable the college to continue work on capital improvements. Hearty congratulations to the staff and trustees for this success.

Congratulations, too, to Advancement Chair Darwin Glick '58 and his committee for the record achievement in voluntary support. As noted above, the College received more than $4.5 million in cash gifts, and set a new high in the number of individuals and organizations making those gifts. Of special note during the year was the completion of the challenge from The Kresge Foundation, resulting in over $2.6 million in library support.

Now Lebanon Valley is poised to move "toward 2001" with new resources, a new president and his vision and a Strategic Plan under the leadership of trustee Ross Fasick, to get us into the 21st century.

My compliments and appreciation to the hundreds of volunteers and thousands of benefactors listed in these reports. Your work and support will benefit Lebanon Valley students well into the new millennium.

Sincerely,

Lebanon Valley's new president, G. David Pollick, sat down recently with John A. Synodinos, president emeritus as of June 30, for an hour-long, wide-ranging discussion on the college's success over the past few years and its prospects for the future. Judy Pehrson, executive director of college relations and editor of The Valley, served as moderator.

John A. Synodinos

G. David Pollick

Pehrson: The college has just completed a successful campaign that brought in $23,945,000, nearly $3 million over the goal. What were some of the major factors that contributed to that success?

Synodinos: Happily, the TOWARD 2001 Campaign had all of the elements necessary for success: effective strategic planning, compelling needs, a strong case for support, full commitment of the Board of Trustees and other governance bodies, strong volunteer leadership, an able and energetic staff, several very large initial gifts, early and full support by the campus community and a generous response from all constituencies of the college.

Campaigns exist in the mind—people need to believe in the vision, in what you are trying to accomplish. Those to whom you turn for support must first believe that you will, in fact, be successful. Lead gifts of the kind and size we received early in the campaign from Ed and Susie Arnold and from Clark and Edna Carmean gave us credibility and momentum. The initial and generous support of the trustees, members of the Alumni Council and Parents Council and faculty and staff provided a clear demonstration that those closest to the college fully supported the campaign. The campaign committee, led by our national chairman, Tom Reinhart, did an outstanding job contacting and visiting alumni and friends who in turn responded generously. It wasn't long before the campaign had become a way for people to express how proud they were of Lebanon Valley College. Once that pride emerged, success was never in doubt.

Pehrson: How was the original campaign dollar goal derived? What needs did the college have at that time?

Synodinos: The needs were clear. After years of deferred maintenance and stringent budgets, the physical plant was in terrible shape. Faculty salaries had fallen to unacceptable levels. Funds were needed—for scholarships, for faculty and staff development, for equipment. And we knew we had to create a campus-wide, fiber optic computer network that would link LVC with the new world communication and information systems that were then just emerging. But it isn't enough simply to tally your needs. You must also conduct a feasibility study to determine the institution's readiness for a campaign, its capacity to raise funds...a kind of reality check. To assure objectivity, the board engaged outside counsel. The report of our counsel suggested that Lebanon Valley might command perhaps $18 million over a five-year period. That wasn't nearly enough, so we took a deep breath and said, "Let's go for $21 million."

Pehrson: What has the campaign accomplished, particularly project-wise?

Synodinos: Within the $21 million overall goal were specific goals for annual giving and endowment. Both were substantially exceeded, making it possible to slow tuition growth dra-

Doris Bishop Library with all of its attendant technology. The campaign also provided several wonderful new facilities for the arts, including the Leedy Theater, the Suzanne H. Arnold Art Gallery and the Zimmerman Recital Hall. It provided funds for the work begun this summer to improve the social quad in front of the Mund College Center, including new walkways, lighting and entrances. The social quad project includes the Ray Carr Pavilion a much-needed stage for outdoor events that I'm sure will enhance student life.

Pehrson: In what other ways has the campaign specifically benefitted students?

Synodinos: I think students would agree that the library benefits them—use has tripled since it opened. Attendance at campus events has increased significantly as a consequence of the new arts facilities. And any student who has had an opportunity to live in Derickson Hall or in one of the small houses we were able to purchase and renovate has certainly benefitted from the campaign, whether directly or indirectly.

Pehrson: Over the past eight years, the college has completed about $14 million worth of construction projects, yet only $8 million in commitments came from the campaign. How were the rest of the projects funded?

Synodinos: Because overall college finances were strengthened as a result of the campaign, we received excellent rates on a bond issue. Enrollment increases during the period also helped by providing larger annual operating margins, which were put to good use improving the campus.

matically and to provide more scholarships and financial aid—in short, to make the college more affordable. Exceeding annual and endowment giving goals also provided the means to raise faculty compensation levels, purchase needed equipment and expand professional development opportunities.

Raising funds for physical facilities, on the other hand, was somewhat more difficult. Still, much was accomplished, including renovations to the Administration Building/Humanities Center and construction of the new Vernon and Pehrson: You mentioned how the goal was determined for the campaign. A number of projects were identified and then the list was pared down. What kinds of things were put on the back burner?

Synodinos: We would have liked to have built a field house as part of our new athletic complex and to have turned Lynch Memorial Gymnasium into classrooms and offices. Until that's done, the college cannot easily expand much beyond its present enrollment.

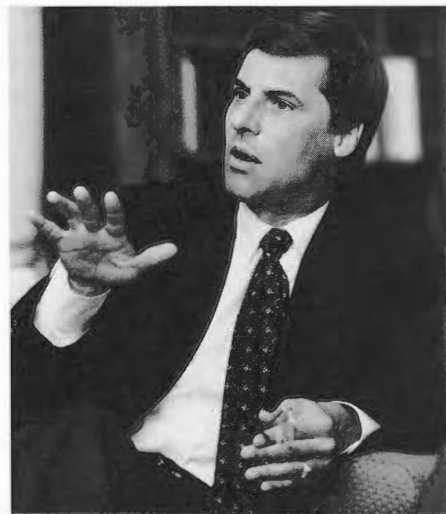

The residential areas to the east of College Avenue remain to be landscaped, and there is also the peace garden project intended for the area behind Center Hall. The Mund Center could use about $2 million in additional renovations. And the Administration Building/Humanities Center's façade, roof and HVAC systems need replacement at a cost of about $1 million.

Pehrson: Here's a question for both of you: If you were going to prioritize needs, which would you see as most important?

Pollick: I think the needs are clearly growing out of a certain pattern that has been already established. What John has worked on so diligently these past eight years in some sense preceded him. He had the insight to see what lay within the institution and needed to be drawn out. The old cliché of seeing the giant that sleeps within and breaking it free—that was what John was doing. I hope that I am blessed with the same insight. Many of the projects that he has been pointing to are really a logical consequence of the nature of the institution. For example, developing the academic side of the college logically requires more space.

So the need for a new gymnasium is a direct outgrowth of the college's academic priorities.

Beyond facilities, there also stands the inevitable evolution of our programming. It isn't a case of needs not having been addressed before, it is a case of what stands before our students, decades out. The directions we'll take are as natural and logical as the growth of a child, with all the surprises that always involves.

Synodinos: I think David is correct. You take a college from where it is, find its natural bent, and then find organic ways to grow it so that change follows naturally. Change without continuity, sudden and veering shifts, are not only frightening, they are dangerous. The things that really matter, that define the college—the way our faculty care about students, the strong sense of community that pervades the campus, the kind of students that are drawn to this college—these are preserved best through evolutionary change. And as David said earlier, the college must look hard at its academic programs to be certain they meet the needs of the coming century. Liberal education, the kind that prepares individuals for life and for making a living, will continue to be viable, indeed central to what we do. But as the world changes ever more rapidly, the content of that education cannot rest unexamined or unchanged. And I think there is going to be a growing demand for continuing education, particularly at the graduate level. We must do more than simply offer the M.B.A. degree if we are to meet the needs of our region's teachers, professionals and retired persons who want to explore and learn as a means of remaining vital.

Pehrson: The college has experienced a lot of change over the last eight years. Is the pace of change going to slow down or will it accelerate, and will outside forces have an impact on this?

Pollick: Certain kinds of change feel faster than other kinds. I think the changes the college experienced in recent years had some very dramatic gestures connected with them. They were physical and they were aesthetic. They were powerfully psychological in terms of how people viewed themselves on campus. What was being held up was a reflection of their very best selves, and it was coming out three-dimensionally in facilities and two-dimensionally in various forms of publications and publicity. People in the larger community were starting to talk about the college and the changes it was experiencing. People internally said "Yes, we're changing quickly, and that's okay."

But there is also a different kind of change, change that involves programming or even the academic character of the institution—while it may not be as dramatic, it can be more upsetting to a community. One has to be very cautious with change of this kind. So when we talk about the speed of change, I am not sure that speed is as much the issue as the kind of change and the effect it is going to have in a community. Does that make sense?

Synodinos: I think it does, in the sense that not everything changes at once and some things never change. It is no secret that society doesn't place the same value on liberal education as it might once have. It isn't willing to pay anywhere near its true cost. How then do you protect the college's internal core mission? In part, by surrounding it with things that contribute to the college's economic viability...a more comprehensive continuing education program and changes in the way continuing education is delivered, including additional off-site centers and distance learning delivery systems. The strategies are numerous. You form partnerships with other organizations, you create greater awareness of your own institution, you serve your community in meaningful ways. Preserving what you value most requires change. But it isn't simply a question of how fast or slow change comes. It comes at various speeds depending upon what is being changed.

Pollick: The inner core of the institution has been to care at a very deep level for the emotional and intellectual maturity of the students. Now, that's going to manifest itself in so many different ways at different times in its history. I think, more than anything else, that's the challenge we face now as a community.

"Our young people's business takes place throughout the planet, not merely in a single nation. We are a planetary institution and, while it sounds a little bit like Star Trek, I don't know any other way to talk about it."

—G. David Pollick

I feel very strongly that faculty have a tendency to undervalue themselves tremendously in our academic communities. The faculty here are a small percent of a small percent of the population of this planet. They are a blessed, gifted population of intellectuals and, as such, have a grave responsibility. Many times this is not understood or is too easily forgotten. Faculty here have both the ability and obligation to stand ahead of their students, to leap ahead of the moment—by 20, 30, 40 years—and to look back on behalf of their society and say, "This is the way. Come this direction." They must do this—I can't do it for them. And if they don't, there arises the question of a violation of vocation. This, more than anything else, is what the faculty will hear from me as long as I'm here—because it's their leadership, not mine, that will direct the future of this campus. After all, it was the quality of this faculty and the way they care for their students that had the most to do with my decision to come here.

Synodinos: A true "vocation" requires acceptance of a tremendous responsibility. The faculty must decide the shape and direction of the academic program. In the final analysis, it is they who must be accountable. Too often, it seems, our focus, our attention, is on the 50-minute hour—the course unit—as if that is what constitutes the educational program, even defines the institution. It doesn't even begin to define it. Rather, as David notes, it is the way the faculty care for their students, the importance they attach to their responsibilities as teachers, the example they set, the values they hold and impart...these are paramount. New technologies are indeed making it possible to deliver courses across time and space in ways that some claim are "more efficient" than can be accomplished in a residential college setting. If we allow that argument to go unchallenged, then it may well be that the liberal arts college as we know it will in fact disappear. But that isn't going to happen because you cannot do what our faculty do best by relying chiefly on electronically transmitted courses. It takes the entire undergraduate residential experience—participation in athletics, involvement in organizations, internships, studying abroad, serving as a resident assistant, providing community service, learning to live with others. Central to that experience at Lebanon Valley College is a student's close interaction with faculty who teach, advise, coach and mentor in classrooms, offices, laboratories, studios, theaters, galleries and recital halls throughout the campus. It takes a real community to wean responsibly a young person from the family, to prepare a student for a purposeful life and a living earned in a meaningful way. Technology, rather than creating the demise of small residential colleges, is actually serving to enhance them. The argument for going to a large university had always been the wide range of choices it offered a student. Today, with the new distance learning and information technologies now available at Lebanon Valley, students will have access to a wider range of courses and to data bases, information systems and libraries throughout the world.

Pollick: Without the loss of the college's character, too.

Synodinos: Without the loss of its character. And, if you really want to know why Lebanon Valley will be around for many years, just take a look at what's happening at the mega institutions. By design, these organizations place a high premium on controlling their world and fashioning it to their own ends. By preference, however, they would like to imitate small colleges like Lebanon Valley. They're doing that because an increasing number of students want to be part of a real community, one constructed on a human scale in which meaningful relationships are possible. And, if they no longer have to sacrifice choice and diversity, they'll opt for a small college any day.

Pollick: That's a very powerful notion—that control of the world versus becoming a partner with the world. That is something that I would like to think more about. I think it is true that students in environments like Lebanon Valley's are finding a way to be more in harmony with the world. In heavy research institutions, there is a great tendency to attempt to control the environment. The past failings of such mechanistic efforts ought not to be forgotten.

Synodinos: Right—to be in harmony with the world and not just control it. I may use that...

Pollick: We need to get together about once a month and just talk. (Laughter)

Pehrson: I know Lebanon Valley will never become a mega university but how much might we grow?

Pollick: So many people asked me during my early visits what I thought the optimal size for the college was. I don't think there is an optimal size, at least not in the way people are asking that question. So much of it is defined by not only your values but your economy of scale as well. If you're 800 students and have all the facilities you need and your endowment is $75 million, it's easy to say, "We're the perfect size." If you're 800 students and your facilities are tawdry and you have no endowment, you are not the optimal size. As you can see, this isn't a case of educational values. This is clearly a case of...

Synodinos:...appropriate balance.

Pollick: Yes. And so as people ask me what the right size for us is, I can say, "Well, are we physically done? Is the campus where we want it to be? Is our endowment where we want it? Is the class size the way we want it? Are faculty getting the opportunities they need?" If people say no to these questions, but then say we're the right size, they don't need a new president, they need a Houdini—a master of square circles. And so I don't know what the number is exactly. I do know that we have to take a look at what our ideals are for the community—educationally, physically and in terms of a secure financial future. Then the question will be one more easily answered.

Synodinos: The college's existing strategic plan calls for only modest growth over the next few years. There is no question that significant further growth will require additional facilities. That alone suggests it will be necessary to revisit the current strategic plan to be certain all of the elements and strategies necessary for growth are provided for and well understood.

Pollick: Even before I came, the college had been looking at opportunities for growth that won't increase the pressure on our physical resources. As John has mentioned, there are some opportunities that need to be explored in graduate programming. We also need to take a very hard look at how our students become citizens of the world—the way they become informed about cultures within our own nation and around the planet. So there are a number of opportunities that we can look at.

Synodinos: The college is fortunate that David brings a lot of experience in developing international programs. We've made a start in bringing international students to the campus and sending our students abroad, but much more needs to be done.

Pollick: When I was in college, and I have no reason to think this wasn't the same case for you, John, the only people who studied abroad, who even gave it a thought, were the very privileged. Travel abroad was for the wealthy. That isn't the case today. It is part of the curriculum of growing up in this world. Our young people's business takes place throughout the planet, not merely in a single nation. We are a planetary institution and, while it sounds a little bit like Star Trek, I don't know any other way to talk about it. And so for us to say, "Well, gee, study abroad is a nice option for our students," is to miss the point. It is not just an option, and we need to find a way to help students and parents see that it is part of the curriculum from the earliest days that they're here. I think the goal of sending every student abroad is a genuine ideal. And though not achievable, it is the right kind of ideal for a college of the 21st century.

Pehrson: What about the achievement-based scholarship program? That is a question on a lot of people's minds. Will that be maintained?

Pollick: Before we talk about maintaining the program, I think John ought to have a chance to talk about it in terms of what it is and what it has meant to us.

Synodinos: The scholarship program is a means of rewarding achievement. Together with existing financial aid programs based upon need, this program is our way of making certain that students who want to come to Lebanon Valley can afford to do so.

Higher education is a very competitive arena in which the playing field is hardly level. Public colleges and universities have a tremendous advantage. Most people aren't aware of the

"The one thing that cannot be permitted is standing on the sidelines and not playing. That would not be an institution that I could take pride in."

— G. David Pollick

Valley, in effect, radically altered its price structure. The college not only lowered the price, it did it in a way that told parents more nearly what it would cost them at the point they wanted to know that information...at the beginning of the application process not at the very end of it.

There was, of course, some risk in launching the program. If, after lowering our price, we failed to attract greater numbers of students, we might have had a financial disaster on our hands. Fortunately, the program drew wide and favorable attention in the media and it struck a responsive chord...parents loved it. As a result, enrollment increased 43 percent in four years.

Pollick: It would be difficult to add much to what John said in regard to the issues that are driving the scholarship program. The most important thing is that it is driven by a concern for access—firmly rooted in achievement. And this is something our parents and students understand. The two things that have made this very attractive to people is that it is philosophically what they believe in while remaining clear and simple. As parents desperately try to figure out how to finance education, they find themselves covered with paperwork by colleges, the federal government and state bureaucracies. They don't know what huge subsidies these institutions receive, subsidies made possible by the taxes we all pay. Whereas once public institutions drew largely from those with limited means, they have become increasingly attractive to middle and even higher income families. Now, with our scholarship program well established, Lebanon Valley is able to offer students an affordable alternative to the state universities.

The scholarship plan offers students in the top 10 percent of their high school class a one-half tuition scholarship; those graduating in the second decile receive a one-third scholarship; and in the third decile a one-quarter scholarship. It's really very simple. And, if a student still cannot afford the remaining cost or did not qualify for one of the achievement scholarships, he or she is eligible for need-based financial aid.

By implementing this scholarship plan, Lebanon they are doing and are absolutely befuddled by the entire process. They have had this dream from the time their baby was in a crib, and what ought to be one of the most glorious moments in their life becomes buried in a maze of confusion and paperwork—and horrible frustration.

Synodinos: And along comes Lebanon Valley with its scholarship plan saying, “Wait a minute folks. If you know where your son or daughter ranks in class, you’ll know pretty much what it will cost you right now.”

Pollick: Exactly. And you can plan ahead.

Synodinos: And, LVC won’t put you through hoops, and the decision won’t be arbitrary—your son or daughter’s achievement determines the basic cost.

Pollick: And so that’s the reason there’s been such success—it’s a good thing, it is simply a good thing. So, will that principle continue? Absolutely. Now, we could be affected by a whole range of factors, but not only should the achievement scholarships continue, I would like to find ways to take the principle of achievement and extend it through the four years students are here.

Synodinos: In some ways Student Services has already begun doing that. Academic performance and contributions to college life play a large part in who gets to live in the coveted new Derickson Hall apartments and in the new small residences. You’re right, the principle of rewarding achievement can be applied more broadly. That’s a great idea.

Pehrson: Do you anticipate any new major programs? I understand faculty committees have been established to discuss the master of liberal arts and master of science education degrees, for example.

Pollick: While I think there is clearly some appeal to these programs in terms of their providing a service to our community, the faculty and I have had no opportunity to discuss these programs. It is simply too early for me on this one, Judy.

Synodinos: The programs under consideration serve to illustrate a point David made earlier about a college growing organically, growth that evolves logically. Consider the program our science faculty initiated several years ago to retrain elementary and middle school science teachers in a five-county area. Funded by major grants from the Whitaker Foundation and the National Science Foundation, it now involves contracts with 23 school districts. It impacts hundreds of teachers and thousands of students. Well, some participants, pleased with the progress they were making, began to see a need for a more formal and extended program, perhaps at the master’s level. It is out of that very specific experience—our faculty working closely with elementary and middle-school teachers—that the possibility of adding a master’s in science teaching first arose. I believe that’s the kind of change that is appropriate and possible at a liberal arts college.

Pollick: Faculty find themselves in the unenviable position of having to create the concrete expressions of their principles. They must continually translate what they believe in into something hard in the world. These are our programs. A master’s in liberal arts is a profound expression of a certain set of values. The faculty need to find the best way to express that in a curricular form. All John has ever been able to do, and all I am able to do, is to nudge—to reflect the world as best we can and to help them see things in a slightly different way because of our perspectives. International education is one example. Career orientations is another. I hope the faculty will share my perspective on the inseparability of the world of contemplation and the world of work. Young men and women come to us, not just for theory, but for guidance into how theory helps to serve the world. To give our students opportunities for internships very early in their college career strikes me as a good way to allow them to get their hands on the world quickly. This is the kind of thing that I can say to a faculty. It falls to them to find the best way to realize it. But, regardless, the world is not an option. We are not free to choose or not choose the world, just as we are not free to choose or not choose international.

“In this highly volatile world, a small college has a significant advantage...it can make decisions and make them rapidly. Fail to take advantage of that and you lose.”

Synodinos: It is important to remind everyone at times—and that’s part of what David does and what I tried to do—of how the outside world is changing, how it is impacting the college. Changes in the external environment are constantly presenting new opportunities and creating new threats. In response, faculty are being asked to make decisions that are very difficult, that touch at their core beliefs, their innermost nature. And because of the rapidity of the changes in the external world, they must make these decisions in a timely manner. Other institutions are also in the process of responding to that world, trying to adapt and meet new needs. So I think the degree to which we are able to make timely decisions is terribly important. In this highly volatile world, a small college has a significant advantage...it can make decisions and make them rapidly. Fail to take advantage of that and you lose.

Pehrson: Last question. What do you envision that the college will be like in five years or 10 years?

Pollick: I thought about this while we were talking a little bit earlier this morning, and it brought to mind an analogy to the Summer Olympics. A couple of figures in these games were very interesting to me, and they're the senior statespersons, if you will. I was watching the interviews with Janet Evans, a senior swimmer on the U.S. team, and with Carl Lewis in track and field and Shannon Miller in gymnastics. They are all at the end of their Olympic careers. Yet the greatness of their careers is unquestioned. They're passing something along to another generation. In terms of the life of this institution, I feel that John and I are at a similar moment—not at the end of his career certainly, but at the end of his presidency at Lebanon Valley. There's now a passing of the baton. And, because of what's been accomplished in this community by John, I am able to run faster. So Carl Lewis may not win this year, but other people will win because of Carl Lewis. And that's kind of what I'm feeling is coming out of the past eight years. John won his races, and it's because of him that this community and I are going to be able to achieve some things together. What are we going to look like? The faculty is going to be telling me that and I will listen—and I will go the directions that they wish to go. The one thing that cannot be permitted is standing on the sidelines and not playing. That would not be an institution that I could take pride in. The colleagues and potential friends that I see here are the people that I want to lead this institution. I'm not sure what it's going to look like. I do know that at its heart will remain the student. The teaching relationship, the mentoring relationship, will be at the heart of this institution forever. It's going to manifest itself in ways that I have yet to imagine, and that's exciting for me. You may have some other ideas about this, John, and I would love to hear them.

Synodinos: I recall eight years ago people kept asking, "What is your vision for the institution?" I said, "No, no, no, you don't understand. That's not mine to decide, it's ours. All of us have to contribute if the vision is to be genuine." In that sense, I'd like to contribute something to the dialogue. So I'll try...

I remember a few years ago, Professor Robert Heilbroner came to speak to our students and faculty. I had read his book, An Inquiry into the Human Prospect, years ago and knew he would have something of interest to say about the world our students would inherit. He began his talk by telling us of a single question, which if asked of every person who ever lived, would serve to divide history into three parts. The question was, "What would the future be like?" Those who lived in the period between the dawn of civilization and the 17th century, he argued, would answer, "The future will be very much the same as the present." After all, the rate of change during this entire period was so infinitesimal that it could hardly be noticed within the life-span of a single individual. Then, along about 1700, came the scientific and technological revolutions, and the pace of change quickened. Ask the same question, he said, of someone born after that date, and increasingly you would receive the answer, "Why the future will be better, of course."

The idea of progress held sway for the next two centuries. Meanwhile the rate of change continued to accelerate. And then, somewhere past the middle of the 20th century, the idea of progress became tempered by the realization that the world's resources were not infinite and that the environment was more fragile than anyone had realized. Ask the question of those born after that date, and the reply would increasingly be, "The future will be worse than the present."

I was stunned, staggered. Heilbroner's question had given us all a tool to understand, more clearly than ever, the magnitude of the change that had occurred in the world. Indeed it was true...young men and women today are in fact being told that their generation will not be as successful as the generation of their parents, that they won't see the same material gains in their lifetimes and that neither will their children or their grandchildren.

For me, the challenge faced by faculty, the challenge that will most surely determine what this college and others will be like in 10 or 15 years, is to figure out how this new reality, this new perception of humankind's future, will impact the education we offer, the kind of values we impart. If continued material progress threatens to destroy the world—and, if unchecked, I believe it will—what do we tell our young men and women? How do we organize knowledge and bring it to bear on the world they will inhabit? Can we not now bring ourselves to legitimately argue, as Thoreau did many years ago, for a redefinition of "success," a definition that places greater value on service, fosters an inherent respect for nature, emphasizes quality over quantity and addresses the inner life more eloquently than our current more materialistic world permits? What path can we offer today's youth which, if taken, will preserve the environment while providing the possibility of a life full of meaning, purpose and opportunities?

I suspect Lebanon Valley College's future will depend largely on the answers given to these and to other very difficult questions.

Message from the Advancement Chair

Dear Friends of LVC:

Many times I am asked: Just what is the role of "Advancement" at Lebanon Valley College? The short answer is to say that "advancement" refers to advancing the cause of the college beyond the campus, through the offices of Alumni Programs, College Relations and Development.

The volunteers and staff in Alumni Programs, primarily through the Alumni Association, provide activities and services to enhance the life-long relationship of former students with their alma mater. The College Relations Office expands public awareness of LVC through publications (The Valley, for one) and brings outstanding LVC accomplishments to the attention of the media. Development, more than simply fund-raising, encompasses the good work of scores of volunteers and staff who help many people and groups to enjoy their LVC association in so many ways.

How good it is to report on a year of exceptional Advancement achievements. Some of the highlights:

Alumni Programs had an outstanding year as evidenced by the increasing attendance at events and programs. One of the most innovative developments, which really came on stream this year, was the Career Connection, a computerized career development program involving nearly 1,000 alumni and parent volunteers. Through on-line technology, the Career Connection helps job-seeking students with advice, résumé preparation, interviews, internships and sometimes even jobs. Staff from the offices of Career Counseling, Computer Services and the Bishop Library joined the Alumni staff to pull it all together. Now alumni, too, can take advantage of this service through the Internet.

The office's success may also be seen in the growing number of those expressing pride in their alma mater as they return for Homecoming and Family Weekends in the fall, and Alumni Weekend and the Alumni Hostel in the spring. Speaking of pride, have you seen Pennsylvania's new Lebanon Valley College license plate? Now available through the Alumni Programs Office, nearly 400 are in circulation. When you see one, toot to show you're "LVC Proud!"

Much of the credit for LVC's increased recognition goes to the College Relations staff. Major pieces about the college appeared in USA Today, the Los Angeles Times and the Chronicle of Higher Education. Publications produced by College Relations received prizes from the Council for Advancement and Support of Education and from Women in Communications. During the year, College Relations produced 300 publications, and more than 2,000 items of LVC news were carried by the press across the United States.

This higher visibility for the college and its successes have also encouraged more volunteers to help with such varied activities as the Career Connection, Alumni Ambassadors, reunion committees and class agents for annual and reunion giving.

Another innovative activity involving both academic and advancement areas is the Lebanon Valley Education Partnership. Seven years ago, LVC and the Lebanon School District embarked on a plan to increase the number of students going to college. Beginning with the 6th grade, youngsters were exposed to the meaning and opportunity of college. LVC students serve as mentors and tutors when the students reach 9th grade. The program, now with over 180 students, is funded by an annual golf tournament supported by the local business community. The tournament has raised over $230,000 for scholarships and program operation.

This year the first group of students—20 in all—graduated from Lebanon High School and are now pursuing postsecondary plans. I'm pleased to say that three of them are freshmen at LVC. Congratulations to everyone—trustees, volunteers, teachers, counselors, Lebanon High School and LVC students and staff—who have made this magnificent opportunity possible.

I've saved for last my congratulations to the Development volunteers and staff. What a year they have had! This is truly a time for superlatives.

Giving from private sources totalled $4,035,136, a 25.1 percent increase over last year and an all-time LVC record. The 4,783 people who made this possible also represent a new record. The total of both public and private giving—$4,591,548—is also a new high for the College. The volunteer leaders who chaired and served in many capacities—in the TOWARD 2001 Campaign, the senior class gift drive and annual giving committees—are listed elsewhere in this report. But these volunteers, together with a smoothly running Advancement staff, deserve our thanks and hearty applause.

The Advancement successes reported here show a growing spirit of appreciation, by people in all walks of life, for the outstanding teaching and learning going on at LVC. And these people, through their willingness to help with their time, talent and treasure, are not only casting their "votes" for excellence in education, but are advancing the strengths of Lebanon Valley College.

Thanks to all of our volunteers and contributors for your help. We will work hard to continue to merit your confidence.

Sincerely,

TOWARD 2001 ... a Lebanon Valley odyssey

Embarking on journeys, exploring new worlds and rising to challenges have always been firmly grounded in tradition here, but the completion of the TOWARD 2001 Campaign was a remarkable achievement, even by Lebanon Valley standards. It represents the hard work and generous spirits of countless friends of the college, but nobody is more deserving of a pat on the back than the campaign's indefatigable chairpersons.

Heading the overall effort were Drs. Clark and Edna Carmean '59, who served as the campaign's honorary co-chairs. For six decades, since their arrival on campus in 1933, their lives have been intertwined with the growth of Lebanon Valley College—as teachers, administrators and college historians. Clark joined the faculty as a music instructor and has also served as dean of men, director of summer sessions, director of auxiliary schools and director of admission. He now serves as director of admissions emeritus. Edna's positions with the college have included being assistant to the president, executive secretary of the LVC Centennial and associate director of public relations. The alumna majored in psychology.

"Lebanon Valley College," says Clark, "cultivates particular characteristics in students beyond academic ability—self-assurance, compassion and interest in others. And the family feeling that attracted us years ago still exists here."

It was only natural that the Carmeans should play a role in the effort to prepare the college for the next century. "We felt that a new library was the number-one necessity for Lebanon Valley," Clark says, "and now we're just delighted to see it finished. The alumni supported us wholeheartedly and came through when they were called upon. The most gratifying thing for us was seeing that the old spirit is still there."

To catch a glimpse of that "old spirit," we had to look no farther than the dedicated alumni serving as the campaign's regional chairs.

Eugene Geesey '56, chair of the Capital Area Campaign. A Dutchman halfback and economics major, Geesey went on to a career in insurance bonding, opening up his own firm, Construction Insurance and Bonding, in Harrisburg in 1968. Grateful to the college for the happy memories and the solid start in his career, Geesey plunged into campaign work enthusiastically. "It's been one of the most fascinating and rewarding experiences of my life," he says. "The enthusiasm of the alumni and supporters was just outstanding. It made me proud to be a part of Lebanon Valley College." The Capital Area Campaign surpassed its goal, raising $661,142.

Darwin and Libby Glick '58, '58, co-chairs of the Lebanon Area Campaign. For the Glicks, devotion to their alma mater is powered by an especially strong feeling: gratitude. "My wife and I feel we owe all we've accomplished in the world to the fact that the college gave us an education," says Darwin, a CPA retired recently from the Lebanon firm of Glick, Stanilla and Siegel. "It's a debt you can never repay. We're committed to passing this on to the next generation." Though the Lebanon Area Campaign raised a total of $1,502,035, Darwin insists that the work is far from finished. "We can't sit back on our laurels," he says. "The challenge is always there for the college to maintain the level of excellence it's achieved in recent years."

Steve and Janet Roberts '65, '68, co-chairs of the Philadelphia Area Campaign. Steve, the owner of a computer software firm, and Janet, a teacher, have been involved in alumni fund-raising activities for years. Signing on as co-chairs for the Philadelphia region was a natural extension of their commitment to Lebanon Valley. "I give credit to my education for a lot of things I've been able to do," says Steve. "When we heard about the campaign, we knew that we wanted to be part of it." In all, the Philadelphia Area Campaign raised $210,688.

Clair and Jeanne Noll, '55, '57, co-chairs of the Berks Area Campaign. Their careers have taken them all over the world, but their hearts have always belonged to Lebanon Valley. Clair retired in 1993 as vice president of Pennsylvania Power and Light; Jeanne recently retired from teaching vocal music in Kutztown. Through the years, they've been active in alumni activities and have welcomed the chance to serve as co-chairs. "Both of us feel we got an excellent education at Lebanon Valley," says Clair. "It's something we feel strongly about. It's a wonderful family environment, and we want to see that tradition continue." Thanks to their efforts, the Berks Area Campaign raised a total of $112,727.

Carol and Harry Yost '62, '62, chairs of the Lancaster Area Campaign. Sometimes, following your career path means taking unexpected turns and exploring uncharted territories. That's the way it was for the Yosts. Harry started out as a chemistry major and ended up pursuing a career as a tax and estate lawyer. Carol, who majored in elementary education, now works as a counselor for the Lancaster County Council on Drug Abuse and Alcoholism.

Most folks will tell you that the ability to move smoothly from one field to another is the result of a solid education, and that's what the Yosts say they received at Lebanon Valley. "We really felt our confidence grow at the Valley," says Carol. "As a small school, it gave us lots of attention, and we didn't get lost in the crowd. The College really opened doors for us and gave us great opportunities." When the Yosts had the opportunity to serve as Lancaster campaign chairs, they jumped at the chance. "With more competition for fewer students, private colleges have a big hill to climb these days," Harry explains, "so it's rewarding to see that Lebanon Valley has done well in that environment. And Carol and I have so much pride in the school. As alumni, we have a real connection with it, and we're delighted to have been part of the campaign." The Lancaster Area Campaign raised $514,835.

Campaign Cameo

And the band plays on ...

As long as Fred Erdman shows up with his trumpet—something he's been doing just about nonstop since he received his first trumpet as a birthday gift back in 1928. Since then, he's become a local legend—and then some. He's been a renowned performer and conductor with a host of local bands, a music teacher and mentor to countless students, a dedicated member of his church orchestra and the father of two Lebanon Valley music instructors. Now Fred Erdman's name is on a scholarship that will help inspire new generations of musicians with his love of making music.

Erdman, though retired, admits that staying active musically is the most important thing for him. "I tried to teach my students that they don't have to get paid for what they do—they can still be fine musicians if they only do it for their own pleasure," he says. "And I know they've remembered that—so many have come up to me afterward and said they not only learned good music from me, but also a way to live. I tried to teach them that the main reason you do music is because you love it."

"His influence is amazing," says Lee Moyer '62, manager of Marty's Music Store in Lebanon. "He's created so many good trumpet players that he's influenced the entire Valley—the quality of trumpet players in the Lebanon Valley is unsurpassed in the state. And the interesting thing is that his influence has gone beyond his students. Many of his former pupils have become musicians and teachers in their own right, so he's had an effect on music not just in Lebanon, but nationwide."

Moyer, who studied under James Checket '59, a former pupil of Erdman's, is one of those second-generation musical descendants, and one of Erdman's biggest fans. In spring 1994, Moyer formed a committee of local musicians to pay tribute to Erdman for his many contributions to the musical life of the region. Those initial meetings led to the establishment of the Fred Erdman Scholarship Fund, which awards a grant annually to a Lebanon Valley music major.

Sophomore Amy Vituszynski, from Leesport, Pennsylvania, is the current Erdman scholar and the latest in a long and distinguished line of his musical "children." A tuba player and a music education major, she's active in several campus ensembles. Among them are the Little Brass Ensemble (conducted by Erdman's son, James) and Brass Menagerie, a group that performs at weddings and other functions. "The Erdman family has such a reputation for excellence," says Vituszynski, "so it's a real honor for me to receive this scholarship. He's a wonderful man, and I've heard lots of stories about his hard work and the way he carries himself. It's something that I hope I can live up to."

and in 1975, sleepy, tree-shaded Annville was caught up in the fray. Ten miles to the north, some 17,000 Vietnamese citizens, refugees from their war-torn country, were crowded into the musty barracks of Fort Indiantown Gap, waiting for American sponsors to offer them a ticket to freedom and a brand-new start in the United States.

Two of those refugees, Luong T. Nguyen and his brother, Bang, ventured down to Annville one afternoon. On a corner of Main Street, they were lucky enough to bump into an LVC English professor who would end up changing their lives—and his own in the process.

For Glenn Woods '51, at the time an associate professor of English, that chance meeting prompted him to offer the two brothers English lessons and hospitality. Their meeting eventually led to the college's sponsorship of 12 Vietnamese students, 10 of whom graduated and went on to notable careers. Through the years, most have kept in close contact with one another and with their American "dad."

"Many of us lost our parents when we came to America," recalls Luong Nguyen '79, "and the Woodses took their place. We would not be where we are today without our American mom and dad" ("Mom" is Carolyn Woods). Nguyen is senior scientist and consultant for Rohm & Haas in Philadelphia.

The relationship was very much two-sided, insists Woods, now retired. "It was a wonderful learning experience for us," he says. "It opened up a whole new world to us. And having them here enriched the life of the college as well. It showed us that people less fortunate than many American students could survive and contribute quite a lot to the cultural and academic experience. Other students saw them as highly motivated kids willing to work hard, who did especially well in math and science."

Their relationship with the Vietnamese students also provided Glenn and Carolyn with the challenge of teaching English as a Second Language—something neither of them had done before and only learned through trial and error. "We tried all kinds of ways to teach them," Woods recalls. "One of the students, Si Pham, had me put vocabulary words on tape, and while he mowed the grass—he had a part-time job with the college maintenance crew—he would listen to those tapes. Today, he is one of the most outstanding heart surgeons in the country—he was a member of the team that performed the transplant surgery on Governor Casey." Clearly, Woods is bursting with pride for his Vietnamese "children."

At a recent reunion on campus, his "children" established a scholarship fund in his honor that will allow future Vietnamese students to find a home at Lebanon Valley. The scholarship came as a complete surprise to Woods. "We'd been planning our reunion last year, and that was great—the scholarship was the icing on the cake," he notes.

Alumni Participation

It was the summer of 1944 ...

and World War II was dragging on in Europe and the Pacific. On the home front, civilians were saving their ration coupons for butter and eggs, digging their victory gardens and flocking to the movies to see Barry Fitzgerald in Going My Way. In Annville, the Lebanon Valley Class of 1948 was showing up to begin its four-year occupation of the campus. In that group of eager freshmen—mostly young women—was Elaine Frock, from Hanover, Pennsylvania.

"Those were very interesting times," she recalls. "We didn't have the freedom that college students have today—things were very strict and the curfew at North Dormitory was at 10 o'clock sharp. But we had a lot of fun. We didn't have dances, but I played field hockey, tennis and basketball. And gradually things began to change as the returning veterans came back to campus."

Some 50 years later, Elaine Frock Stepanek paid tribute to her alma mater with an important gift recognized through the Frock Conference Room in the Rismiller Tower of the Vernon and Doris Bishop Library. As 20 or so people meet there, they can gaze at a beautiful vista of campus through the room's glass wall. The room is fully wired for telecommunications.

Attending Lebanon Valley was a family tradition for Stepanek, whose mother and aunts all graduated from the Valley. Although she wasn't quite sure what she wanted to do with her life, she found the college a good place to explore her interests, which ranged from business to biology to music. "The professors were excellent," she recalls, "especially George Struble, who taught English, and Alexander Crawford, who was my vocal professor for two years."

Stepanek eventually decided on a business major, and after graduation pursued a career that started out at Bell Telephone in Harrisburg and led to a position with the Department of Labor in Washington, D.C. Working with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, she researched data for the Consumer Price Index. Her work took her to cities and towns all over the country. "I did interviews with buyers and department managers at stores everywhere," she explains. "The idea was to check prices on everything—whatever people eat or wear or use, from groceries to cars to pharmaceuticals. It was very interesting work, and I loved the travel. Back then, of course, it was rather unusual to be a woman in that position, but I was always treated courteously."

Stepanek and her husband, Edward, divide their time between their homes in Minnesota and California; they don't get back to the Valley as often as they would like. But a family friend was in Annville recently, where he stopped by the new Bishop Library, tracked down some yearbooks from the 1940s and photocopied a few select pages, which he sent on to Stepanek. "It was wonderful to look over those pages," she says, "and to relive some of those memories—the beautiful May Days, and the old friends and some of the old buildings. It was a nice, family atmosphere in a very small town. We knew that everyone cared about us, and expected good things from us."

Campaign Cameo

The play's the thing ...

That got it all started—not only for the Leedy Theater, but for the newest generation of the Leedy family as well. “My son was a student at Lebanon Valley, helping out by building sets and painting scenery,” recalls Ken Leedy, president of New Penn Motor Express in Lebanon. “A young lady named Kathleen Ryan was directing a play. Well, one thing led to another, and what do you know? Now I have two beautiful grandchildren.” When it came time to consider a gift to the college, the Leedy family—Ken and his wife, Linda; their son, Greg '92, and his wife, Kathleen Ryan Leedy '90—had no trouble coming to a decision. They provided a TOWARD 2001 Campaign gift to renovate the Little Theatre in the Mund College Center.

Completed in the fall of 1994, Leedy Theater has been the scene of dozens of productions, from Torch Song Trilogy to Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All, from Molière to Neil Simon. “In the two years since the theater's opening,” says Kevin Pry, English lecturer and drama coach, “we've been able to do more sophisticated work because of the quality of the environment. Student participation has increased dramatically, and I've seen a higher level of professionalism and discipline. We couldn't have had this renaissance in theater production without the Leedy Theater.”

A state-of-the-art facility, Leedy Theater is a place where students can stage top-notch productions. Its improvements feature the latest elements in theater design, including all new seating at a better angle, electronically controlled stage lighting and a rebuilt stage. There's also a separate workshop for constructing sets, allowing rehearsals and performances to go on uninterrupted.

Which is great news for Kathleen Ryan Leedy, who is thrilled to see the changes but remembers the old days. “There was so much tradition, where everything was passed on from one generation of students to the next,” she recalls. “We did everything, from choosing the scripts to working the lighting to running the publicity. It was a terrific experience.”

Lisa Epting '98, president of the Wig and Buckle Society, a student thespian group, is helping to carry on that tradition in the new theater. This year's busy season includes Crimes of the Heart, Nunsense and Antigone. “We have amazing opportunities here, and really impressive resources,” Epting says. “Everyone who knew the old theater says how much things have improved.”

The heart of the college ...

Is the library, where books are just part of the story, and bricks and mortar just part of the place. The new Vernon and Doris Bishop Library is grounded in Annville but hooked up, via cyberspace, to the world. It's become the central gathering place for students and faculty and the scene of a flurry of scholarly activity.

"That's been one of the most satisfying things about the new library—besides all the people coming through the doors," says Rob Paustian, director of library services. "You can see a different look on the students' faces. I can't tell you what the teachers are noticing, or whether the students are writing better papers or not. But I have noticed more studying going on here. The students seem more serious than they used to be. I think the building looks like a more scholarly place to be, and people are using it in a more scholarly fashion."

Jasmine Ammons '97, a senior English/political science major, agrees. "It's easy to access everything," she says. "Periodicals are easy to find, and using the computers has been tremendous—you can check the Web to find out anything you need to know, even where to put a semicolon. And it's been great to use the group study rooms to review pieces of literature we've studied in class."

The new library, of course, was made possible by the generosity and dedication of thousands of people, but three of its especially well-used areas were funded by especially generous corporate gifts.

❖ The reference and circulation area is a gift of the Mr. and Mrs. William F. Brossman Charitable Foundation. It's the place that everybody uses, coming and going. Students stop at the main desk to check out books, make inquiries, arrange interlibrary loans, pick up reserve materials or borrow videocassettes and CDs from the library's extensive collection. It's the high-volume spot, right by the front doors, and it's seen library use increase by a factor of 10. That's welcome news to Garth Sprecher, Brossman Foundation spokesman. "Seeing the new library, and knowing that the Brossman Foundation has had a part in it, is very gratifying for all of us," he says. "We've always had a strong commitment to education, and our friendship with Lebanon Valley College goes back a long way. It's nice to know that our gift will play a part in the lives of everyone who uses the library."

♦ The bibliographic instruction laboratory is a gift of Lebanon Valley National Bank. Sooner or later, just about everyone heads down to this lab on the ground floor. The room is equipped with 24 computer workstations and a projection monitor. Faculty use it to conduct research classes in individual disciplines. An economics professor, for example, might teach students ways to access the Internet to learn more about current monetary indices.

In the evening, the room doubles as a computer lab, staffed by students from computer services. "This is so important to the youth who will be using these services," says Albert Murry, president and CEO of Lebanon Valley National Bank. "An electronic library is indispensable in this day and age, and we are delighted to have helped."

♦ The media preview room is a gift of Hershey Foods Corporation. If you want to watch Henry V, listen to Beethoven's Ninth or scan through the Encyclopaedia Britannica, this is the place to be. Computer workstations, networked to a printer, are equipped with multimedia packages that make it possible to listen to audio CDs, view videocassettes and read books on CD.

Beyond the books ...

a library is a meeting place, a study center, the heart and soul of any college's academic life. Here at Lebanon Valley, the Vernon and Doris Bishop Library is all that and more—it's a powerful symbol of the dedication of the college's alumni and friends.

One of those friends, of course, is Vernon Bishop, whose generosity went a long way toward making the library a reality. A Lebanon County business leader and chairman of the Lebanon Seaboard Corporation, he pledged the lead gift of the TOWARD 2001 Campaign, establishing a distinguished chemistry chair and naming the library as a tribute to his late wife, Doris.

The couple moved to Lebanon in 1948, when they purchased a half interest in a chemical manufacturing business. What started out as a small company with just 12 employees grew to become one of the major manufacturers and marketers in the East of fertilizer for lawns, gardens and golf courses. Today, Lebanon Seaboard has over 500 employees, serving the farm trade along the Eastern Seaboard from some 50 locations. The Bishops' daughter, Katherine Bishop, now serves as president of Lebanon Seaboard and is a trustee of Lebanon Valley College.

The Bishops have been long-time supporters of the college. Vernon received the Founders Day Award in 1981, and provided leadership in a number of college projects, including serving as a regular member of the Annual Fund Business Committee. In 1989, the Bishops provided a leadership gift as part of the Kresge Foundation Science Initiative Challenge, which raised nearly $1 million to provide equipment and an endowment for the science program.

"Both Doris and I have always believed in giving something back to the community that has been so good to us," Vernon says. "I feel that our gifts to the college are a way of giving to the community."

Campaign Cameo

have never been known to shy away from a challenge. When it came to the Kresge Challenge—the granddaddy of them all—students, faculty, alumni and friends came through with flying colors.

In November 1994, when the college was still $2.6 million short of the $7.2 million needed to complete the new library, the Kresge Foundation—one of the country's largest and most prestigious philanthropic organizations—made Lebanon Valley an offer it couldn't refuse. If the college raised $2.1 million toward its goal, the Kresge Foundation would contribute the remaining half-million dollars. Being chosen for the Challenge in the first place was a great honor: Only 20 percent of the institutions that apply are awarded grants. Meeting the Challenge successfully was a major accomplishment.

As it turned out, the college not only met the goal, but went way over the top. Final figures show that contributions reached $2,250,952, representing 1,010 gifts given specifically to meet the Kresge Challenge. To reach that goal—the focal point of the TOWARD 2001 Campaign effort from December 1994 through November 1995—a series of regional campaigns and events kicked into high gear in Lebanon, Lancaster, Philadelphia, Berks, Baltimore-Washington, New Jersey and the Capital Region. In addition, the fall 1995 Phonathon was devoted entirely to the Kresge Challenge. Finally, letters went out in mid-fall 1995 to all alumni, current and former parents and friends of the college, inviting their support and offering one last chance to rise to the Kresge Challenge.

"For Lebanon Valley, meeting the Kresge Challenge was something of an opus maximus," said, Dick Charles, vice president for advancement. "Literally hundreds of volunteers, from the trustees to people in the community, all made a tremendous effort to bring it together. In the end, we raised more money for a single purpose than has ever been raised by the college in a single year. It's something all of us can be proud of."

more or less. Next time you head to Ikea for some clean, spare, easy-to-assemble furniture or hang a Tiffany-style lamp in your dining room, or take a nap on your Mission-style bed, you can offer a silent thanks to the leaders of the Arts and Crafts Movement.

They struck a blow for the human spirit in the midst of the clanking and clamor of the Industrial Revolution by honoring simplicity and handwork above the cold and anonymous efficiency of the machine.

The movement, celebrated at the Suzanne H. Arnold Art Gallery with the exhibit, "Simple, Dignified and Frank," turned back to the medieval craft guilds for its inspiration, and in turn inspired future generations of artists and craftsmen. The first exhibit of 1996-97, it featured furniture, pottery, woodblock, metalwork and prints by some of the most renowned artists in Gustav Stickley's Craftsman Workshops.

Visitors were treated to a room-within-a-room, a re-creation of a middle-class parlor decorated in the Arts and Crafts style. "The room setting is wonderful," says gallery benefactor Dr. Suzanne H. Arnold. "It's so inviting. It gives you a real feel for the time, and it makes you want to walk in and sit down. It's been a thrill to see exhibits like this and know that the gallery has far exceeded our expectations."

The Arts and Crafts movement, says Dr. Leo Mazow, the gallery's new director, began as a backlash against the despoiling effects of the Industrial Revolution. "Division of labor and mass efficiency robbed the average worker of seeing a product through from inception to completion. Ironically, though, almost all of this stuff is factory produced; in order to speak in the past tense, you have to produce in the present tense. You have to look backward in order to look forward."

That's a wonderful lesson for the current crop of scholars and artists at Lebanon Valley College, who are fortunate to have access to world-class exhibits right on campus. "I think every artist draws inspiration from seeing other works of art," says Natalie McDonald '97. A senior majoring in English and minoring in art, she is an intern at the gallery. "Seeing the real thing is so much more effective, so much more vivid, than reading about it in books or looking at slides. And having the gallery here on campus has been a stepping-stone for a lot of students. I've seen kids come to the gallery because they had to, as part of a class. But the really great thing has been seeing them come back later, on their own."

Lebanon Valley Education Partnership

The Lebanon Valley Education Partnership is a program carried out with the Lebanon School District that encourages young people to consider attending college. The three-part program familiarizes students with the college environment, identifies those qualified to pursue a college education and provides scholarship funds if they should choose Lebanon Valley.

Each September for the past six years, friends of the college and representatives from local industries have participated in a golf outing at the Lebanon Country Club. The tournament has raised over $230,000 for scholarship assistance. The honorary chair each year has been Lebanon native Sam Bowie, former center for the Los Angeles Lakers.

Campaign Cameo

East meets West . . .

In Annville. This story begins in 1963, when Kiyofumi Sakaguchi, a freshman from Japan, met an all-American girl from Danville, Pennsylvania, at Lebanon Valley College.

For Sakaguchi, coming to Annville as an international student was "a little like going to the moon. My English was very limited, and I had difficulty not only with speaking, but also with understanding lectures and taking notes." But his language troubles, it turned out, fell under the category of "clouds with silver linings." Joanne Cochran, a fellow student in Agnes O'Donnell's freshman English class, tutored him in English and lent him her notes. Before they knew it, the couple had fallen in love. "I used to kid Joanne later that she used her notes as bait to catch a very innocent boy from Japan," he recalls.

They married following their graduation in 1967, and made their home in various cities and towns around the United States. He pursued a career as an actuary and she taught Spanish. In 1980, Sakaguchi joined the Prudential Insurance Company and was assigned to head its Japanese subsidiary. After almost 19 years in the United States, he found himself heading back home.

Joanne had visited Japan before, and willingly returned there to live, recalls Sakaguchi. "Because she was part of me, she also began to have a feeling for Japanese culture. There was almost no culture shock for her when we went to live in Japan. And as a language major, it didn't take long for her to learn Japanese—within a year, her language was very good. Our three sons found it difficult for a while, but they adapted very quickly."

But tragedy struck the Sakaguchi family several years ago when Joanne developed a brain tumor and, following surgery, lapsed into a coma. She died in 1995. In her memory, her husband, now president of Sony Prudential in Tokyo, set up a scholarship fund at Lebanon Valley. "It will be a four-year scholarship," explains Paul Brubaker, director of planned giving. "It's still in the development stages, but already many of his friends and business associates have contributed to it."

"I miss Joanne so much," says Sakaguchi. "I owe her so much. Everything we built, we built together. My life would have been so much poorer if I had not had her with me. She was a wonderful human being."

Fortunately for the college community, however, her memory will live on. The Joanne Sakaguchi '67 Memorial Scholarship will help future generations of international students from Japan to more easily encounter their new world in Annville and to become part of the college community.

Grimm-Shirey: To a student with a good academic record, involved in campus activities and respected by students and faculty.

Hilda Hafer: Preference given to a student preparing for the ministry or missionary work from the First United Methodist Church of Chambersburg.

Rebecca S. Harvey: To senior(s) for current tuition.

Alice M. Heagy: For current tuition.

J. M. Heagy: For current tuition.

Campaign Cameo

Once upon a time...

There was a "merchant princess" who went by the name of Mary Sachs. She put her heart into running her renowned Harrisburg women's apparel shop, and she put her soul into sharing what she could with anybody who needed a helping hand. From the time she opened the Mary Sachs store in September 1918 until its doors closed for the last time in 1968, customers flocked to her for distinctive fashion and personal service. Among her regular clientele, Sachs welcomed first ladies of the nation and the state. Retailing giants like Neiman-Marcus and Bergdorf Goodman copied many of her merchandising techniques.

But Mary Sachs is best remembered for her kindness and generosity. Her sister, Hannah Cantor, has devoted her life to continuing that tradition. "Mary had a beautiful, generous spirit," she recalls. "Now it's my privilege to carry on her pattern of life."

Lebanon Valley's students and visitors can be reminded of the life of Mary Sachs every time they pass through the red brick gates on Sheridan Avenue. Through the Mary Sachs Trust, Mrs. Cantor provided funds for the entryway, which was dedicated in April 1993. Named in honor of Hannah Cantor's late husband, Benjamin, the gates help define the boundaries of the college and foster a sense of identity and belonging. "When you go through those gates," says Arthur Goldberg, trustee emeritus and a close friend of Hannah Cantor's, "you know you've come into a special place. No matter which way you look, you find yourself in the heart of the college. It's a great sight."

For Mrs. Cantor, friendship with Lebanon Valley seems to come naturally. "Health and education were the two most important causes for Mary and for Ben," she says. "To follow their example is a way for me to keep their spirits alive. And I feel privileged to be part of such a wonderful college. What can I say? God has been good to me and I thank Him every night."
